According to Titles II and III of the Americans with Disabilities Act, a service animal is any dog that is individually trained to do work or perform tasks for the benefit of an individual with a disability, including a physical, sensory, psychiatric, or other mental disability. Service animals are permitted in all areas where members of the public participate in the services, programs, or activities of the Court. Though persons with a disability are not required to provide any verbal or written confirmation to establish the existence or extent of his or her disability, they may be asked specific questions regarding their service animal. If not immediately evident, qualified individuals may be asked whether their animal is a service animal and, if so, what services it has been trained to provide. Service animals must be kept on a leash, harness, or tether (unless using one is not possible due to the handler's disability, or interferes with the service animal's performance) and be within the control of the individual with a disability at all times. For the security and safety of all individuals, if at any time the animal becomes unruly or aggressive, the court may ask that the animal be removed from the facility.
